Hub's first Undie Run outpaces fundraising high

Fun run. Hundreds will put the hilarity in charity by dashing around Fenway Park in their bedroom best.

Undie runs in other states have been successful, but Boston has already doubled its fundraising efforts. / JOHN E. RAMSPOTT

What's more romantic than 800 Cupids running a mile around Fenway Park in their skivvies? How about big-hearted Bostonians nearly doubling a fundraising record to help children with tumors.

Just in time for Valentine's Day weekend, the Cupid's Undie Run Boston is slated to kick off Saturday on Fenway Park's Yawkey Way. Being that it's the fundraiser's Boston debut, organizers are flabbergasted that the event has already trumped the previous record of $35,000, with Boston on pace to double that for the Children's Tumor Foundation by Saturday's event.

"It's great that we're running in our underwear, and its great that we're raising money, but when people aren't aware of something, they can't affect change. Awareness is the key," said Jake Burke, a Medford native turned Georgia resident whose 9-year-old son, Jack, is struggling with Neurofibromatosis, a genetic disorder of the nervous system that causes tumors to grow on nerves.

One in every 3,000 children is born with the disorder, which can lead to blindness, deafness, learning disabilities, cancer and chronic pain.

More than 200 people are signed up to run on Jack's team Saturday.

But Burke said he knows of about 1,600 others who donated, bringing his team's total fundraising to $116,000.

"What I've been blown away by — people I haven't set eyes on in years have either signed up or donated. The community up there has been tremendously supportive of us," said Burke.

Founded four years ago in Washington, D.C., the annual valentines-themed fundraiser has grown to become the world's largest underwear run, with dozens of fun runs popping up in cities across the U.S. and Australia. Last year's fundraisers collected more than $1.3 million.

Boston race director Lindsey Norse of Waltham met the organizers of the inaugural race in Washington, D.C., while they were promoting the event. After learning what a huge success the race has been in the last few years, Norse, a manager in the fitness industry, figured Boston deserved a crack at its own run.

"I thought, 'Cupid's getting really big now, why not do it in Boston?'" Norse said, adding that she is "excited and thrilled" at the city's outpouring of support so far.

"I've been brought to tears at least once a week," Norse said of the fundraising success.

Following the run on Yawkey Way, runners and spectators will take to the streets in celebration of their underwear-clad efforts and embark on an afternoon of bar hopping around Fenway.

"We may be in our underwear, and it may be cold, but that's what the bars are for," said Norse.

If you go

It costs $50 to register.

- The party starts at 12 p.m. and the run starts at 2 p.m.
- A celebration will commence after the run, until about 4:30 p.m. Participants must be over 21, and an ID is required.
- "Arrive early and stay late ... and feel free to remain pants-less the entire time!" the event's website said.

State spending. Activists want more eco funding

In what has become an annual request, environmental activists again called on the Legislature and Gov. Deval Patrick Thursday to boost spending on environmental programs to 1 percent of the state budget, a level last achieved 13 years ago.

According to the Environmental League of Massachusetts, state funding for environmental agencies and programs currently accounts for 0.6 percent of the budget.

"For a progressive state such as Massachusetts, spending less than 1 percent is a disgrace," environmental groups wrote in their "green budget" Thursday. SHNS

Tribute will mark Boston bombing's first anniversary

Boston Strong. An April 15 event is planned to mark the one-year anniversary of the Boston Marathon attack.

The Boston Athletic Association on Thursday announced plans for an official tribute event to mark the one-year anniversary of the Boston Marathon bombings, a terror attack that took the lives of three people and injured more than 260 spectators near the Boylston Street finish line.

The event, hosted jointly by Mayor Marty Walsh and Gov. Deval Patrick in coordination with One Fund Boston, will be held at the Hynes Convention Center in Boston on April 15.

"Through this event, Boston again stands as one: paying tribute to all those affected by last year's events, and once again showing the world that Boston's spirit of resiliency lives on," Walsh said.

The bombing put the Boston community to the "ultimate test," Patrick said.

"But we rose to the occasion: turning to each other, rather than against, and showing the world what a strong community looks like. Though we all had our lives affected in profoundly different ways, this tribute will show the world again that we stand as one."

The tribute will include speakers representing victims' families, medical staff who treated patients, responding government agencies and a host of civic leaders. It will conclude with a flag-raising ceremony and moment of silence.

NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

The event will be by invitation only. Details on the tribute, including a list of speakers and other program elements, and logistics for the public, have yet to be announced.

Snow tracks

Boston man arrested after cops follow footprints

A Boston man was charged with breaking and entering Wednesday after police tracked his "freshly made footprints" in the snow.

Eddie Alvarez, 35, of Boston, was found lying behind a house on Allegany Street as police investigated reports of someone walking through yards and ringing doorbells.

As officers approached, Alvarez allegedly said, "You got me."

A search of the immediate search of the area led to the discovery of a bag containing, among other things, two Apple Macbook computers and several pieces of jewelry, police said. METRO

Euthanasia

Belgium gives 'right-to-die' to terminally ill children

Belgium became the first country to allow euthanasia for terminally ill children of any age on Thursday when its lower house of parliament passed new "right-to-die" legislation by a large majority.

The law goes beyond Dutch legislation that set a minimum age of 12 for children judged mature enough to decide to end their lives. It has popular support in Belgium, where adult euthanasia became legal in 2002.

The Christian Democrats, although members of Prime Minister Elio Di Rupo's coalition, voted against. Christian, Muslim and Jewish leaders denounced the law ahead of the vote in a rare joint declaration.

Severe storms taking a toll on families, schools in Northeast

Disrupted. About 5,771 domestic flights were canceled Thursday, according to FlightAware.

A winter storm that froze the Southeast in its tracks pushed north Thursday, with driving winds and heavy snow snarling travel and closing many schools from Washington, D.C., to New Hampshire, creating havoc for winter-weary parents. Hundreds of thousands of residents in Georgia and North and South Carolina hit by a heavy blast of ice a day earlier remained without power as the storm made its way up the coast, closing much of the nation's capital and threatening to drop up to 18 inches of snow in some areas.

The repeated storms are taking a toll on schools and families, as snow-related cancellations left parents scrambling to find child-care options and administrators looking at making up lost days by extending classes into the summer.

New York City Public Schools, which have taken only one snow day this year, proved a glaring exception and remained open.

Beverages. Lawmaker proposes warning labels for sugary drinks, sodas

All sodas and other sugar-sweetened drinks sold in California would be required to carry warning labels for obesity, diabetes and tooth decay under a bill introduced in Sacramento on Thursday, backed by several public health advocacy groups.

If passed, caloric drinks would join tobacco and alcohol products in carrying health warning labels in California, a state that is a legislative trend-setter.

Proponents say the first-of-its-kind effort takes aim at the national epidemic: 35.7 percent of American adults and 16.9 percent of children aged 2 to 19 are obese, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

A growing body of research has identified sugary drinks as the biggest contributors to added, empty calories in the American diet, and as a major culprit in a range of costly health problems associated with being overweight.

Opinion

TOM FOREMAN

FOREMAN IS A POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT FOR CNN.

APOCALYPSE SNOW

Some scientists say Earth is still emerging from the last Ice Age, while others suggest we're heading into a new one.

After this winter, I'm beginning to side with the latter group. Seems like every time the alarm clock rings, I'm getting another warning about apocalyptic cold and snow coming down like Putin on a borscht bar.

Congress periodically holds hearings on the climate, and after the East Coast was walloped this week I assume they'll do it again. Mind you, if Colorado was buried under a thousand feet of ice, many on this side of the Mississippi would shrug and say, "It's February!"

Still, this relentless winter has lawmakers practically hoarding canned goods and it's put an edge on even the tony D.C. restaurant scene. "Donner? Party of six?"

I'm not sure what these Congressional types will ever do even if they reach a consensus about global weather patterns, especially if they decide a deep freeze is coming. I suppose mandating seat warmers in every car would be good, and if they can OK cloning woolly mammoths, that would be fantastic. Seriously, wouldn't you love to see those bad boys roaming the countryside again?

Of course, if a big chill is really underway, maybe that will happen naturally. As it is, I find myself with an uncontrollable urge to buy sweaters, my neighbor's cats seem to be developing suspiciously long fangs, and I've heard unconfirmed reports of wolves coming down from the hills to snatch unwary commuters right out of the Starbucks line. "Hey Brittany, I have your latte. ... Brittany?"

I guess in the meantime there is nothing for us to do but endure.

Some people are sleeping at their offices, and they don't even work for dot-com startups! Zombie apocalypse? Bring it on. It's the snowmen we need to fear. (The horror. The horror.)

Memo

NSA: Snowden scammed passwords from colleagues

A National Security Agency civilian employee resigned last month after telling the FBI he had inadvertently let former contractor Edward Snowden use his password to access information he was not authorized to see, an NSA memo sent to Congress shows.

The NSA told the Senate Judiciary Committee in the memo that two other workers affiliated with the NSA, including an active duty military member and an unidentified contractor, had also been "implicated" in the matter.

The memo said the contractor and military member had been stripped of their access to classified information and secure work spaces last August, but it would be up to their employers to determine "further accountability."

The existence of the memo, dated Feb. 10 and marked "Unclassified/For Official Use Only" was first reported by NBC News late on Wednesday.

Reuters previously reported that Snowden had used login credentials and passwords provided unwittingly by colleagues at a spy base in Hawaii to gain access to some classified materials. REUTERS

Italy PM Letta to resign

Italian center-left leader Matteo Renzi forced party rival Enrico Letta to resign as prime minister on Thursday after criticizing his government's failure to pass major reforms, opening the way for Italy's third administration in a year.

CULTURE

Goin' back

Before he was

Kevin Hart is one of the biggest comics and movie stars right now. But fame didn't come right away. Here's some early roles:

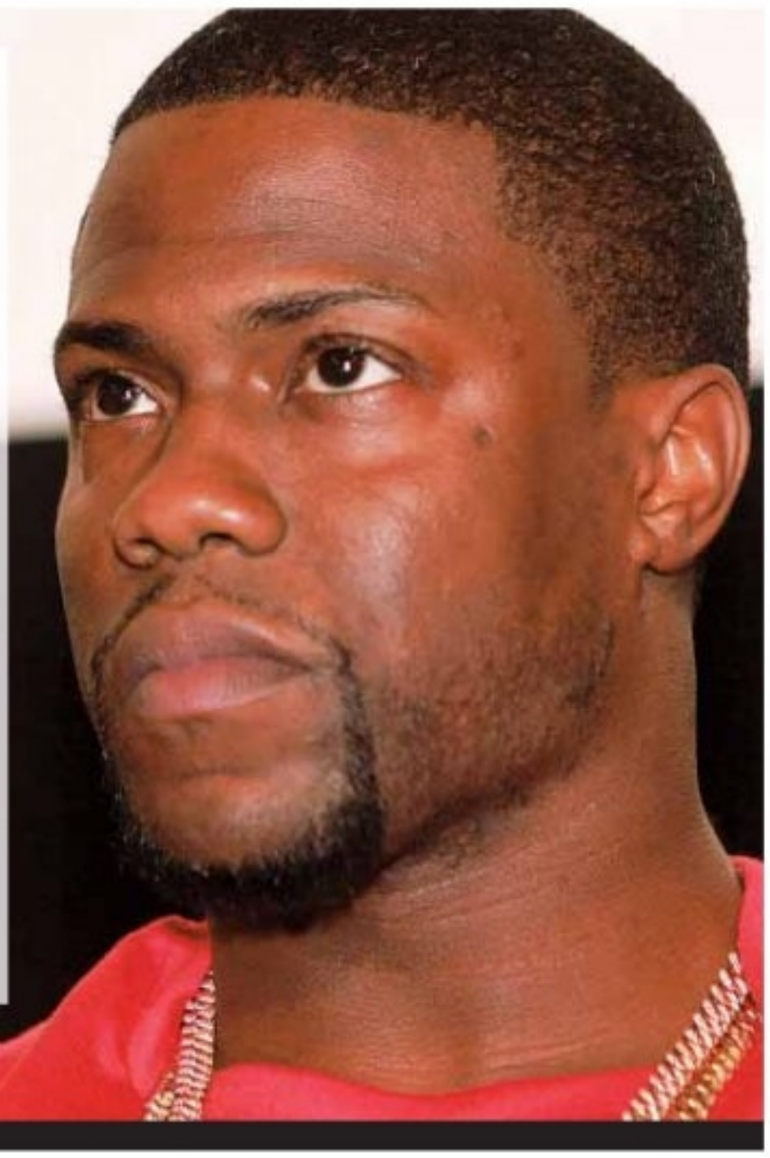
'NOT EASILY BROKEN' (2009):
All comics eventually find their way into a drama, but technically Hart has already done that, playing Morris Chestnut's pal "Tree."

'PARTY DOWN' (2009):
As he was getting bigger, Hart guest-starred on an episode of the cult show, playing a rapper hired to entertain a Sweet 16 party. Instead he just gets bumbling team leader Ron Donald (Ken Marino) high.

KEVIN HART

The comic/actor talks making himself available to his fans and having a thick shell against critics.

EVERYONE'S A CRITIC



Kevin Hart has become a star of comedy, film and social media. / WIREIMAGE

Kevin Hart is already having a pretty decent 2014, with last month's "Ride Along" breaking January box office records to bring in more than $90 million worldwide in its first three weeks of release. He's hoping that success continues in February with "About Last Night." One thing is for sure: He's not letting bad reviews get to him — even when the critics are trying to get his attention.

You're incredibly active on social media.
I'm very serious about it. It's not a game. This is not something I take for granted. I'm very, very, very committed to social media and interacting with my fans the way that I do. It's something that I think people really, really take for granted, and they shouldn't. It's free promotion, but at the same time it keeps you in contact with your fan base.

When did it first occur to you to utilize it so much?
Well, from the word "jump." When I first saw my numbers going to what they grew to, I said I would be a fool to not dive in as much as I could, because this is basically promotion that the studio doesn't have. This is you having a direct connect with your fans. When I say to my fans, "First 200 people to meet me at Applebee's, I want to treat you," they're going to come. And those 200 people in there get to meet me, connect with me, talk to me. You have to have ways of showing that you are giving back — "Thank you, guys, for what you do, which is support me." I'm not a ghost. I'm not the legend that you never see.

I saw someone included your Twitter handle in a bad review of "Ride Along."
A critic's job is to critique. At the end of the day, as an actor, if you allow that stuff to get to you, you're a fool. But you've got to ask yourself, how do critics feel when they critique something, they trash it and then it shows up and it's a record-breaking box office hit? Then you just have to go back into your critic hole and critique some more. But I don't knock it — it's what you're paid to do. Your job is to critique and that's your world of expertise. But if [the film is] getting an A cinema score — which means everybody's walking out happy — then that means you have to question yourself, what you like and where your expectations are. It's like when I did "Soul Plane" — people judged that. "Soul Plane" was supposed to be a stupid movie about stereotypes. You're picking the wrong movie to critique. You're wasting your talent on this one, you should be over there on the one that deserves the critiquing, where they're actors and they're polished. This is stupid because it's supposed to be stupid.

Sticks and stones

Kevin Hart and Michael Ealy enjoy some bro time together in "About Last Night." / MATT KENNEDY

How do you ignore all the negative stuff, especially when it's directed right at your Twitter handle?

I laugh at it. Listen, I understand that with any success comes a certain level of negativity. You don't escape it — it happens. It's just, are you a person that feeds into it or are you a person that smiles and shrugs it off and walks away from it? I think that the ones that survive and make it are the ones who can laugh and go, "That's crazy, look what people say" and then still move on. You know, for every 30 people that love and support you, you're going to have three to five that hate you. It's what life is, it's the nature of what we put ourselves in. It ain't all going to be pretty.

Down with love

It's Valentine's Day, which doesn't mean you need to torture yourself with a film affirming the power of love. Instead, snuggle up with one that speaks to the other extreme. Here are some anti-romances to warm your heart during that chilliest of Hallmark holidays. MATT PRIGGE

'Gone with the Wind'

(1939): Scarlett O'Hara loves Ashley Wilkes but settles for Rhett Butler. After years of being jerked around, he finally leaves, complete with one of the most badass eff-yous in the movies.

'Modern Romance'

(1981): Albert Brooks is Woody Allen if Woody Allen didn't love himself — he's a self-absorbed monster who targets mates the way a cat does a mouse. His second directorial feature begins with him breaking up with his girlfriend (Kathryn Harrold). He immediately regrets this, then spends half the movie trying to win her back. Once she relents, he instantly suspects her of infidelity. No less than Stanley Kubrick counted it as favorite.

'Prick Up Your Ears'

(1987): Was your last relationship crap? You got off easy. Playwright Joe Orton (Gary Oldman) got a hammer to the head after mentally torturing the hell out of his boyfriend (Alfred Molina). Ain't love grand?

'The War of the Roses'

(1989): There are lots of movies where couples go from amour to outright hatred, but only one where they bust out weapons and fight to the death inside a darkened mansion. Director Danny DeVito never softens up, not even at the end, when it seems rich suburbanites-turned-psychopaths Michael Douglas and Kathleen Turner might reconnect. They don't. And that's even better than when she runs over his Morgan 4/4 with a monster truck.

'Blue Is the Warmest Color'

(2012): Great as this is at capturing first love, it's even sharper with the fallout, when one's ex has the nerve to not only move on, but find someone better and more mature. Love, as Def Leppard says, bites.

Kevin Hart and Regina Hall play the fun couple in the "About Last Night" remake. / MATT KENNEDY

Apologies to David Mamet

Remake. The playwright suffers another faithless (but not terrible) adaptation of one of his greats.

The 1986 rom-com "About Last Night…" claimed to be an adaptation of David Mamet's coarse, cynical 1974 play "Sexual Perversity in Chicago." But all it really kept was the opening — a dude talk tete-a-tete about the previous night's escapades — plus Chicago. "About Last Night" is even less faithful. In addition to chucking the title ellipsis, it's set in L.A. And though it starts the same, it quickly devolves into Kevin Hart ad-libs about "whiskey d—" and someone having "the John Legend of penises."

The bare bones setup remains: There are two men — nice Danny (Michael Ealy) and crude Bernie (Hart) — and two women — nice Debbie (Joy Bryant) and crude Joan (Regina Hall). The crude ones hook up first, followed by the nice ones. Initially it seems we'll be getting tonal whiplash, jerked back and forth between the grotesquely over-the-top and the sickly sweet.

But around the second act, Danny and Debbie both relax, reveal pockets of humor and the picture settles into a pleasant groove. While Bernie and Joan angrily split, Danny and Debbie move in together, only to find that cohabitation brings forth unexpected stresses and intimacy issues. Hijinks remain, although having Danny hit up Halloween dressed as Ike Turner — opposite Debbie's Tina — is a special kind of miscalculation.

Only in the third act does it fumble. It's not insincere, but it is semi-sincere, as though it had no interest in rotely moving our lead couple from splitsville back into each other's arms, so it didn't really try. The 1986 film isn't too hot, but it does handle some of the details better, and it features one of the few excellent turns from Demi Moore.

But the actors help. Ealy is unfairly good-looking, but he has a genuine shyness that makes him charming. He and Bryant play the boring couple, but they have just enough personality that their story doesn't lead to thumb-twiddling as we await Hart and/or Hall's return. The best part of the movie: no Kevin Hart short jokes.

Talk to the animals

Lit adaptation. Colin Farrell does his best to give gravitas to a very silly romantic fantasy.

There are few people in movies today better at playing earnest than Colin Farrell. If you the viewer don't believe in the material he's trying to sell, you believe that he believes in it. In other words, he's perfect to put at the helm of the urban fantasy-love story "Winter's Tale." He's perhaps the only person who can deliver a line like "I'm pulled to her, like air when I'm under the water," and make it sound basically OK. But Farrell's not good enough to talk to a flying horse. Nobody's that good.

Then again, perhaps this all reads better on the page. Mark Helprin's sprawling 1983 best-seller has been whittled down to a semi-comprehensible love story that spans a century. Farrell's Peter Lake is an orphaned thief in early 20th century New York who falls madly for Beverly Penn ("Downton Abbey"'s Jessica Brown Findlay). She's a whimsical society waif beatifically dying of a movie version of consumption that renders her body literally hot. She's never been kissed, and Peter would be the man to do that — were he not being pursued by a mob boss who's also a demon (Russell Crowe).

This is a madly ambitious tale. Perhaps it would be worth defending if it weren't for its filmmaker. Akiva Goldsman won an Oscar for writing "A Beautiful Mind," an accolade that tried to obscure such previous credits as "Batman & Robin." He was at one point Hollywood's worst screenwriter, his name a promise of brainless junk and groaning puns.

His directorial debut finds him tripping over dense mythology, struggling to turn a mishmash into a simple love story. His decision to parcel out information winds up backfiring on him, as characters rush to explain magical things that just happened. Sometimes they don't even do that: When Crowe and gang find themselves unable to leave the five boroughs of New York City, he just shrugs and mumbles, "It's the rules."

The tone is a bigger problem. Farrell believes in this, as does Brown Findlay. Everyone else seems lost. Crowe amuses himself with an inexplicable Lucky Charms Irish accent, while Jennifer Connelly struggles to do something with an underwritten mother of a cancer kid. (Yes, it's the kind of film that falls back on dying kids.) Eva Marie Saint swings by to class up the joint for five minutes.

But no amount of pretty faces and living legends can make up for a drippy fantasy that crams the narration track with multiple claims about how "we are all connected." It's not a swooning romance; it's the cinematic equivalent of a unicorn poster. It dares you to laugh at it, so you might as well oblige.

Drake versus Rolling Stone

Drake has a little problem with Rolling Stone.

The singer/actor/Canadian has now sworn off magazine interviews after he claims Rolling Stone tossed his cover for the late Philip Seymour Hoffman for this month's issue — and misquoted him regarding his "mentor" Kanye West's "Yeezus" album.

"There were some real questionable bars on there. Like that 'Swaghili' line? Come on, man. Even Fabolous wouldn't say some s— like that," he supposedly said, which the mag then printed. Drake took to Twitter to recant the line. "I never commented on Yeezus for my interview portion of Rolling Stone," he wrote. "They also took my cover from me last minute and ran the issue."

Regarding the "took my cover" mention — that's media speak for Drake being promised the cover in exchange for the interview. He was apparently then bumped by the editors for Hoffman.

"I'm disgusted with that. RIP to Phillip Seymour Hoffman. All respect due. But the press is evil," he wrote. (It should be noted that all of Drake's tweets have since been deleted.) "I'm done doing interviews for magazines. I just want to give my music to the people. That's the only way my message gets across accurately."

That, or Twitter.

Lil' Kim expecting a lil' baby

Look out, world. Lil' Kim is going to be a mom. The notorious rapper debuted a growing baby bump at the Blonds Fashion Week after-party in New York earlier this week, telling Us Weekly, "I'm so excited. I'm a few months along. I can't wait to be a mom!" Kim is keeping the father's identity under wraps for now, and she has no plans of slowing down. "I'm still going to work," she says. "I'm still going to be hardcore. The baby has made me even more of a beast."

Talking points

Ferrell on the sober love-making

Colin Farrell admits adjusting to a life of sobriety eight years ago was a bit daunting. "I was worried I wouldn't be able to talk, full stop," he tells Elle magazine. "I hadn't uttered a word sober in about 15 years." But that wasn't all he was worried about tackling without the help of a drink. "I made love to a woman about two and a half years after I got clean, and it was one of the most terrifying moments of my life," he says. "It was in the afternoon. The windows and the curtains were open. It was lovely and, to be crass, it wasn't f—ing. She was very gentle. But it was terrifying. Because I was just used to drunkenness and dark rooms and clubs and toilets and wherever."

Jerry O'Connell pokes fun at LaBeouf

Shia LaBeouf has some competition. While the beleaguered "Nymphomaniac" star continues his "#IAMSORRY" performance art stunt at a L.A. gallery space (sitting across a table from patrons one at a time and silently weeping with a paper bag over his head) Jerry O'Connell set up camp in the space next door to do the exact same thing. O'Connell's "#IAMSORRYTOO," mounted for one day only on Wednesday, featured the former "Sliders" star also with a paper bag on his head but in a much better and more talkative mood. LaBeouf is scheduled to continue his sitting and apologizing through Sunday.

ART

'Green Patriot Posters'

Through May 31
315 on A, 315 A St., Boston
Free, www.designmuseumboston.org
This touring exhibition features posters by several artists co-opting the style of World War II-era propaganda to convey the urgency of environmentalist causes. There's an immediate subversive kick in seeing war rhetoric used for nonviolent purposes, but the real genius is to cast conservation as a civic duty — the patriotic thing to do.

'Brink v1'

Through April 13
Mills Gallery
Boston Center for the Arts
539 Tremont St., Boston
Free, 617-426-5000
www.bcaonline.org
This exhibition of four photographers explores ideas of itinerancy in and through modern photography. It's certainly a rich American theme: We're a nation of itinerants, never quite settled down, whether it's out of desperation like the wanderers of the Great Depression, or a simple search for kicks like the hitchhikers of the Beat Generation, or just a new job on the opposite coast.

'Circus Oz: From the Ground Up'

Wednesday through Feb. 23
Citi Shubert Theater, 265 Tremont St., Boston, $30-$70, 617-482-2595, www.citicenter.org
Circus Oz is the nickname for the National Circus of Australia. Like Cirque du Soleil, they eschew the use of animals and all the questions of humaneness that come with it, but they don't share the same artsy weirdness, favoring a more rock 'n' roll style with lots of campy humor and stunts that are both crazy-wacky and crazy-impressive.

COMEDY

Mike Birbiglia

Friday and Saturday
The Wilbur Theater
246 Tremont St., Boston
$35, 800-745-3000
www.ticketmaster.com
This hybrid comedian/memoirist is a darling of the National Public Radio set, where he's rivaled for status as top class clown only by David Sedaris, with whom he shares a penchant for turning weird, awkward or even catastrophic events from his own life — most famously his jumping out a second-story window while sleepwalking, leading to a lot of stitches — into comedy gold.

Anton Chekhov's great last play, "The Cherry Orchard," is a comedy of human frailty. Directed by Obie Award-winning director Melia Bensussen, this should be a "Cherry Orchard" that doesn't just speak of Russia in the 19th century, but of all our lives.

'Death of a Salesman'

Friday through March 15
The Lyric Stage Company, 140 Clarendon St., Boston, $25-$61, 617-585-5676, www.lyricsstage.com
In the days before spoiler alerts, Arthur Miller gave away the whole plot of his play in the title: A salesman is going to die. With that out of the way, he's able to tell the real story, a sad romance between a system that robs people's humanity and a man all too eager to throw his away.

MUSIC

A French Baroque Valentine

Friday and Sunday
Jordan Hall
30 Gainsborough St., Boston
$25-$75, 617-987-8600 ext. 413
www.bostonbaroque.org
This Valentine's Day-themed concert from Boston Baroque, equal parts secular and sacred, features Rameau's one-act opera "La Guirlande" and Charpentier's "Te Deum." "La Guirlande" is a charming pastoral fantasy highlighting the importance of forgiveness in true love; "Te Deum" is a setting of an ancient hymn celebrating the love of God for all creation with a thoroughly baroque exuberance. MATTHEW DINARO

Shirley Temple was a credit to her country

Those of us who remember Shirley Temple and her movies will miss that adorable smile. She was more than a child star of the '30s — in later years, she was a dedicated American who sought to make a difference for the common good. She ended up serving four Republicans presidents in key diplomatic posts. By her service to our country, Shirley Temple Black demonstrated how she loved America; and in return, America loved her back. Rest in peace, Shirley Temple, and thanks for the memories.

Addicts come with hard truths for those who love them

Re: 'A friend in need might need friends' (Metro, Feb. 12) Well, obviously letter writer David DiBello has never been involved with an active addict, and to that I say, you should thank God!

I can say that YES they were there, but trying to reason or help an active addict is like trying to reason with a can of soup! You can beg, scream, cry, help and enable. But an addict will do what they want and forsake all others. I know active addiction, I am married to a heroin addict and alcoholic. I lost everything and became homeless because of his addiction. I was manipulated into believing his lies, and I still tried to help him because I loved him. Finally, I had to let go, or I would lose myself. So, maybe that's what happened. They had to let go — remember free will? Think about that before you blame friends and family. Go to a meeting and listen to addicts speak. Or go to an Al-Anon meeting and listen to families speak — before you speak.

Team USA takes on Russia Saturday

Team USA looks to carry the momentum it built from Thursday's 7-1 drubbing of Slovakia into its showdown with the hosting Russian team, which it will meet Saturday (7:30 a.m., NBCSN). Paul Stastny led the Americans in Thursday's win with a pair of goals and Jonathan Quick got the start in net.

MLB. Pitchers and catchers report to Fort Myers this weekend as the Red Sox begin their title defense.

It remains likely that Stephen Drew will return to Boston. / GETTY IMAGES

A year ago, headlines out of Fort Myers focused largely on John Farrell's first days as Red Sox manager and Jackie Bradley Jr.'s pursuit of a roster spot. This year's version has other matters to address and quite different expectations. Here are some items worth watching once pitchers and catchers arrive en masse this weekend.

Left side support

1 The best-case scenario for the Sox is if shortstop Xander Bogaerts and third baseman Will Middlebrooks settle in well and the idea of re-signing Stephen Drew is officially squashed. That still leaves intrigue in the utility spots, as the organization will need insurance in the event either struggle. A backup infielder is not the sexiest topic, but few cared about Nick Green in camp in 2009 and he played 109 games – 81 at shortstop – for a playoff team. Before Green, Alex Cora was integral to the 2007 World Series champs and two others that reached the postseason. And while most of it resided in the outfield, versatility and depth was key for the 2013 squad. In-house replacements are not plentiful, although there is long-term intrigue in third baseman Garin Cecchini and shortstop Deven Marrero. Don't be shocked if the organization brings into camp a veteran utility guy that can play on the left side and perhaps spell Dustin Pedroia, if needed.

Start me up, slowly

2 A challenge for the coaching staff will be managing the workload of its pitchers. Several worked deep into October, some establishing career highs in innings pitched with postseason added in. Squeezing every bit of rest out of what's left of this offseason is critical. However, it is a tricky balance. Being too careful can prevent pitchers from hitting the ground running, which can lead to adjustments, inconsistency or, even worse, injury. In the past 10 years the staffs of Boston's three World Series champs posted ERAs in March/April that were their best by month all season. The four teams in that span that failed to make the playoffs posted first-month ERAs of 4.67 (2006), 4.61 (2010), 4.24 (2011) and 5.54 (2012).

Put me in, coach

3 Bradley will be in the spotlight for the second straight spring, fighting Grady Sizemore for the center field spot. The improvement Bradley showed late last season and the fact that he is established in the organization figures to give him an advantage, but Sizemore is an intriguing option if healthy. What will be interesting to see is where Bradley, who has some top-of-the-order tools, fits into the lineup. He can work counts and has some speed. Does he replace Jacoby Ellsbury at the top of the order?

ADAM LEVITAN, LIVING THE FANTASY

METRO'S FANTASY GURU BREAKS IT ALL DOWN.

More than any other sport, the post-hype sleeper is a trend to attack in baseball drafts. We look at some of this year's candidates.

Professional Profar

Rewind to about 15 months ago, and you couldn't go anywhere in baseball circles without hearing about the game's No. 1 prospect, Jurickson Profar. Now everyone is off him because he struggled to adjust to major league pitching, hitting .234 with six homers and two steals in 286 at-bats. Relax. He was just 20-years-old and didn't know where he was playing on a given day as the Rangers shuttled him all over the infield and even the outfield. Now he's the no-doubt second baseman and ready to erupt as part of a potent lineup.

Adam gonna eat

Adam Eaton (not the ex-pitcher) is getting a fresh start with the White Sox after injuries derailed him in Arizona. It's an exciting turn of events. Eaton, a true five-tool outfielder, has an excellent chance to win the starting center field and leadoff job.
